

TOKYO SKYTREE 東京スカイツリー*

TOKYO SKYTREE Traditional Techniques and Forefront Technologies from Japan

musashi* 634m, the World's Tallest Tower

TOKYO SKYTREE has been designed in a decade of ambitious skyscraper construction projects all over the world. The architectural goal for SKYTREE was to build the world's tallest free-standing broadcasting tower. The tower height finally decided was 634 meters. TOKYO SKYTREE was entered in the Guinness World Records™ as the "world's tallest tower" on November 17, 2011.

*Mu, sa, and shi mean "six," "three," and "four" in Japanese.

SKYTREE White

An original color derived from Japan's traditional ajiriro, the lightest hue used in indigo dyeing. The faint bluish white on the Tokyo skyline has the subtle luster of a white porcelain.

Vibration Control Structure similar to that of the Goju-no-to five-story pagoda

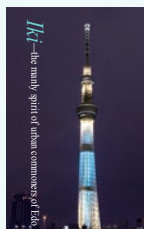

The center column made of reinforced concrete at the core sways differently from the steel-frame tower body at the periphery, thus suppresses vibrations of the whole structure during high winds and earthquakes. This damping mechanism is called as "shinbashira vibration control" after the "shinbashira" of Goju-no-to towers, Japanese traditional five-story pagodas.

A Broadcasting Tower

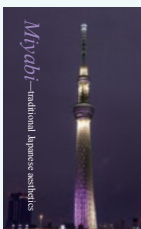

TOKYO SKYTREE transmits radio waves for digital terrestrial and other forms of broadcasting. The high elevation of the transmission source will expand the broadcast area for 1-seg mobile device transmissions.

Lighting that casts colors onto old town sceneries

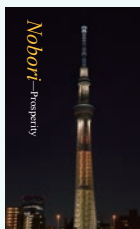

Lighting patterns change among "iki", "Miyabi" and "Nobori" alternately every day. You cannot miss special lightings of each season or events as well.

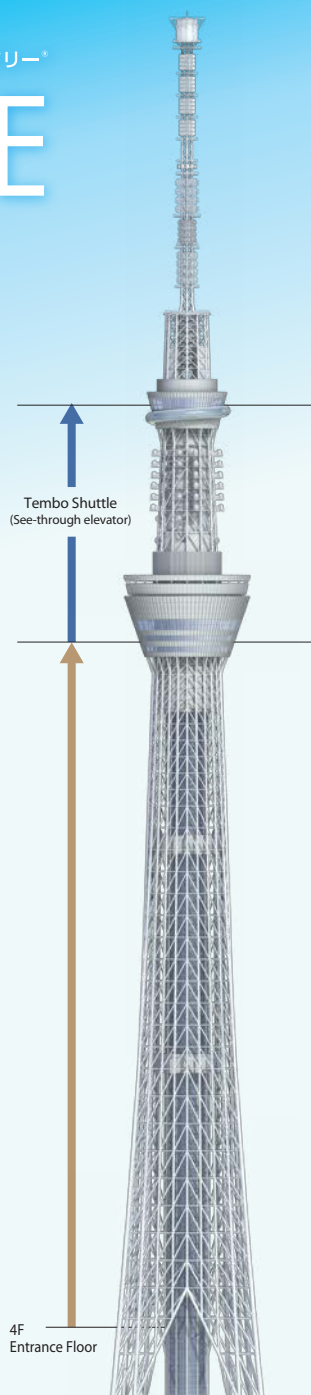

Iki—the main spirit of urban commercial Edo.
The faint blue highlights on the central pillar express a water theme in tribute to the Sumida River. SKYTREE'S blue illumination conveys the full strength and intrepid spirit of Edo.

Miyabi—traditional Japanese aesthetics.
An intricate steel exoskeleton dressed in the decent Edo-murasaki theme color (bluish violet). Brilliant light as that of a gold foil accentuates the tower with elegance.

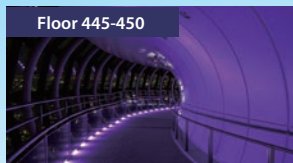

Nobori—Prosperity.
With the base color of tachibana (tangerine) that has been considered as a lucky color since ancient times, the design emphasizing verticality of a Nobori rising into the sky casts a vibrant and joyful light.
